内容简介

Charles Darwin described the island of Borneo as 'one great wild untidy luxuriant hothouse made by nature for herself', and it's still a cornucopia of biodiversity - for now. Sample world-class diving, meandering boat rides, indigenous hospitality, sightings of languid orangutans and stir-fried jungle ferns from the local markets.

A popular destination for eco-tourists Borneo is more accessible than ever due to low cost flights from Kuala Lumpur. And with an expanded focus on ecotourism and border crossing information, this newly revised edition will make traveling around this lush paradise carefree.

作者简介

Daniel Robinson researched the award-winning first edition of Lonely Planet's Cambodia guidebook back in 1989, when Phnom Penh - Siem Reap flights stayed over the middle of the Tonlé Sap to avoid ground fire and, for three days, he was the only guest at Siem Reap's only hotel; the story of his misadventures in a mined temple appears in Lonely Planet Unpacked Again. These days his favourite spots for chilling are the (for now) pristine west coast of Koh Kong Island, the foggy ruins of Bokor Hill Station and the rocky promontory at Prasat Preah Vihear, where breathtaking views stretch almost to Angkor. Daniel is based in Tel Aviv and Los Angeles.
